For a color luncheon coralline rice is nice. Boil some rice in the usual way; put two ounces of melted butter in a dish, add a little salt a liberal sprinkling of coralline pepper, tossing the rice in this until it assumes a terra cotta shade. This is a delightful garnish for eggs or mushroom cutlets, or it may be served alone, sprinkled with grated cheese. The Hungarian red pepper, called "paprika," which is of a mild flavor, not at all like cayenne pepper, can be used for this dish. If more people used this pepper we are told on good authority, there would be fewer sufferers from dysper sia among Americans.
